How Century Direct Solutions keeps print personal with Canon inkjet

Jerry Nassau understands what the power of engagement offers when you do it right. Century Direct brings the same level of care, creativity, and capability to every interaction. It is in his company's DNA—always has been. Since Century Direct Solutions was founded in 1932 as the Century Letter Company, making each and every engagement matter has helped transform the traditional lettershop into a full-service, technology-driven marketing services provider.

As EVP, Nassau leads a team committed to embracing innovation, nurturing client relationships, and delivering measurable results in print, digital, and integrated communication campaigns. Hand-crafted for client success, Century Direct is a true marketing partner adept at handling complex data-driven campaigns to personalized direct mail initiatives. Century Direct's mission is simple: Deliver high-quality, cost-effective, and customized communication strategies for every client. Service offerings include printing, packaging, data management, digital services, mailing with intelligent mail tracking, and comprehensive fulfillment solutions.

"We're smart, hardworking, and easy to talk to," Nassau says. "Our team is committed to building solutions that work because we believe in being a partner, not just a provider. We're committed to building new technologies that add value for our clients. We remain focused on providing innovative solutions that meet the evolving needs of our clients while staying ahead of the curve in today's rapidly changing digital landscape."

"Our culture is centered around client success. Every technology investment, every process improvement—we evaluate it through that lens."

— Jerry Nassau, Executive Vice President, Century Direct Solutions

At the core of Century Direct's success is its willingness to adapt. Leveraging relationships with partners like Canon U.S.A., Inc. has enabled it to not only adapt, but remain relevant to its clients and the market. That proactive approach has proven essential in a time of ongoing shifts in marketing strategy, rising postage costs, and increasing demand for faster, more targeted outreach. Century Direct's investment in cutting-edge technology is one way the company ensures its clients not only keep up but stand out.

Take Century Direct’s pivotal moment in production evolution. To keep in step with growing consumer demand, the Islandia, New York, company chose to invest in the Canon varioPRINT iX sheetfed inkjet press. Known for its exceptional uptime, high resolution, and ability to produce vibrant, personalized content, the varioPRINT iX3200 has helped redefine what’s possible for Century’s team and its clients.

“The Canon varioPRINT iX3200 allows us to produce quick turnaround and high-quality print pieces that meet the demands of today’s marketing and communications,” Nassau says. “Its ability to handle high-quality personalized pieces in-line—cost-effectively and efficiently—has had a significant impact on meeting our customers’ requirements.”

With Canon’s advanced workflow tools seamlessly integrated into Century’s production environment, the company is equipped to handle a wide range of applications, including complex projects with variable data and personalized messaging. The added benefit is client satisfaction. “Canon’s technology not only supports our business—it helps us support our clients,” Nassau says. “We hear from them regularly about the quality of the product. That feedback reinforces that we’ve made the right decision.”

Built on experience.
Driven by cultural innovation.

While its capabilities span industries, Century Direct is especially effective in working with nonprofits, healthcare, political campaigns, fundraising, financial institutions, and educational organizations. In fact, the addition of the iX3200 continues to open doors for many clients, especially those who once viewed personalized print as financially out of reach.

“Because Canon’s technology has made personalized print more affordable in larger quantities than previous digital solutions, our nonprofit clients are now able to use personalization in ways they couldn’t before,” Nassau says. “That changes the conversation and the outcomes for their campaigns.”

This flexibility is supported by a broad suite of services. From data management and list segmentation to packaging and distribution, Century Direct helps clients turn marketing ideas into tangible, trackable results. Its commitment to data security is equally robust, meeting SSAE 18 and SOC 2 Type II standards while maintaining FDA and HIPAA compliance. “We take data protection and accuracy seriously,” Nassau says. “We’ve built redundancies into our processes to catch any issues early and maintain consistency from proof to print.”

In an industry driven by innovation, Nassau says the Century Direct’s approach to finding what is the best and optimal solution rests in one question: How will this benefit its clients? “Our culture is centered around client success. Every technology investment, every process improvement—we evaluate it through that lens. If it doesn’t bring value to the client, it’s not a fit for us.”

This mindset has created a collaborative workplace where curiosity and adaptability thrive. The company’s leadership fosters open dialogue between internal teams and external partners, encouraging a shared understanding of challenges and opportunities. “We listen closely to what our clients are experiencing and stay proactive in offering new ideas,” Nassau says. “That collaboration, internally and externally, helps us develop solutions that work in the real world.”

The Century Direct team is committed to guiding each of its clients from initial ideation through final delivery, offering guidance and flexibility at every step. "There's no cookie-cutter answer in this business," Nassau says. "Every campaign is unique, and we tailor our approach accordingly."

"At the core of Century Direct's success is its willingness to adapt. Leveraging relationships with partners like Canon U.S.A., Inc. has enabled it to not only adapt, but remain relevant to its clients and the market."

Navigating the headwinds

Despite its long track record, Century Direct is not immune to the challenges facing the print and digital communication industries—chief among them, escalating postage rates and rising competition from other marketing channels. Nassau says these issues continue to drive marketers to trim budgets and focus on more targeted, accountable communications.

"That's why it's more important than ever to offer cost-effective, high-impact solutions," Nassau says. "We're constantly looking for better ways to do things, and are supported by a talented team and group of partners that are incredibly accessible and willing to collaborate to develop the most effective solution for our clients."

Nassau points to Century Direct's decision to install the Canon varioPRINT iX as the type of move that keeps the needle pointing upward. "Speed, quality, and efficiency while meeting increasingly complex client demands. We're leveraging technology to overcome industry challenges. That gives our clients—and us—a competitive edge."

As the industry continues to evolve with each technological innovation, Century Direct is setting its sights on steady expansion. The company is aiming for 10% year-over-year growth, with Canon positioned as a key supporter of that trajectory. "Our growth is driven by our clients' growth," Nassau says. "When we help them succeed, we succeed too. That's how we've always approached our work."

With a nearly 100-year history behind it and a bold vision for the future, Century Direct continues to be a trusted, adaptable, and client-focused presence in the marketing world. Whether it's navigating a complex direct mail campaign, deploying high-end digital print, or managing mission-critical data, Century remains hand-crafted for every client's success. ■
